

2006
SUNDANCE SUMMIT
 A Mayors' Gathering on Climate Protection

On November 12-14, 2006 sixty U.S. mayors will convene in Sundance, Utah.

The goal: to take action on climate protection.

Hosted by Robert Redford, Mayor Rocky Anderson, ICLEI, and The Sundance Preserve, the Sundance Summit combines the foremost tools and expertise with the influence of visionary local leaders to mitigate global warming, one of the greatest threats to the health and prosperity of communities today. Cities and citizens tangibly experience the impacts of global warming first—rising sea levels, shrinking snow packs, ravishing droughts, floods, and hurricanes. U.S. mayors are the political leaders closest to the solutions of climate change and cities taking action are boosting their economies along the way.

“We are the ones building roads, designing mass transit, buying the police cars and dump trucks and earth-movers. We’re the ones lighting up the earth when you look at those maps from space. Together we have huge purchasing power, and if we invest wisely, that can have huge implications for the environment.”

Patrick McCrory
 Mayor, Charlotte, NC
